SYNOPSIS: In the film Titanic, director James Cameron shows the story of the collapse of the famous liner through the prism of the love relationships of the main characters. Jack and Rose are from different social classes, but their feelings are stronger than death. The essence of the film Titanic is that you need to enjoy every moment of life, be honest with yourself and even in the face of mortal danger to remain human.

On April 10, 1912, the famous liner Titanic sailed from the port of Southampton. It was the largest ship, with a capacity of 2208 passengers. His course lay in New York, but the ship was not destined to reach its destination. Everyone knows this story today, the tragedy of the sinking of the Titanic has become the most famous in the world. But in the film, the story does not begin at all with a description of events – Cameron went the other way.

In 1996, the research ship Akademik Mstislav Keldysh moved to the wreck of the Titanic. Brock Lovett, an avid treasure hunter, dives with his team to the bottom of the Atlantic in submersibles. They are looking for a jewel – a blue diamond pendant, known as the “Heart of the Ocean”.

They know that the owner, Caledon Hockley, was on board the Titanic. The searchers raise the safe from the bottom, but only an old drawing of a girl with a pendant around her neck is found in it. When the story was shown on television, Brock Lavet was contacted by a woman who said that she was depicted in the drawing.

Lovett agrees to chat with someone who introduced herself to him as Rose Calvert. She is taken by helicopter to the research vessel. It was there that 100-year-old Rose began her story of the now-famous tragedy. And the viewer, along with her, returns to 1912 aboard the largest and most luxurious liner in the world.

Rose DeWitt Bukater was 17 years old when she boarded the Titanic with her mother, Ruth, and her future fiancé, Caledon Hockley. Rose is forced to marry a wealthy heir to a billion-dollar fortune, although she herself does not want this at all.

The girl understands that she lives in a “golden cage” – she does not have the right to choose, everything has been decided for her a long time ago. Cornered, she becomes desperate and decides to throw herself overboard. And then a random witness comes to her aid – a guy named Jack.

Jack got on the Titanic by accident, winning a ticket at cards. He is generally prone to various adventures and lives one day. Seeing Rose over the side of the deck, he immediately finds a solution. He undresses and pretends to jump with the girl if she lets go of her hands. Rose is stunned, this is not how she imagined her end. Taking advantage of the girl's confusion, Jack convinces her to return back to the deck. He literally drags her there at the last moment, when she almost fell into the abyss.

Thus began the friendship between Jack and Rose. They spend time together on the deck, the guy shows his drawings. He teaches a girl who grew up among the prim rich, to laugh out loud, to spit from the deck, to have fun at a party, to see people, to feel them.

Rose understands more and more that she does not want to live the life that her relatives, society itself, have prepared for her. She does not notice at first how she falls in love with Jack, who gave her faith in herself, freedom, the whole world.

Seeing how rapidly the relationship between Rose and Jack is developing, her fiancé Caledon Hockley decides to eliminate the rival. He tosses him the “Heart of the Ocean” and in front of everyone accuses him of stealing. When the policeman pulls out a pendant from his jacket pocket, everyone rebels against the poor guy. Everyone except Rose. He is taken away and handcuffed to a pipe in the lower deck.

It was 11:40 pm on the clock when the fatal collision of the Titanic with an iceberg occurred. Further actions unfold rapidly. Water floods the lower compartments, the captain begins the evacuation.

Women and children are put on the boats first. Rose's mother and the rest of the 1st class passengers board the lifeboats, but the girl refuses to follow them. She escapes and goes looking for Jack. Rose, moving waist-deep in icy water, finds her beloved and cuts his chains with an ax. Together they go up to the upper deck.

There are fewer lifeboats left. Caledon bribes one of the guards and arranges a place for himself. They meet with Rose and Jack, the men convince the girl to get on the boat. Caledon lies that he and Jack will get on the next boat and also escape after Rose. At first she believes and sits down, but then she realizes that the groom has deceived her. She jumps out of the lifeboat and is back on board.

Caledon can no longer wait – he gets into the last boat and leaves the sinking liner. Rose and Jack are left with the rest of the unfortunates who did not have enough space in the boats. 2 hours and 40 minutes after the collision, the Titanic goes under water. Rose climbs a piece of wooden door, Jack has no place on it. He just stays close and tries to cheer up his beloved.

Forgetting from the cold, Rose falls asleep. Waking up, she sees that Jack is already dead. He froze to death. She takes his hands away from the door and watches as his body sinks under the water. Then she sees a light – the lifeboats have returned. But she no longer has the strength to scream. Then she takes the whistle and whistles loudly. So Rose was saved. On the shore, she sees Caledon for the last time, but turns away from him, covering herself with a blanket.

In the finale, impressed by the story, Brock Lovett no longer even asks about the fate of the jewel. He suddenly realized that all these three years he had been chasing a stone, although the main value of life is completely different. Standing on the deck, he said so to his granddaughter Rose: “I spent three years searching, raving about the Titanic, but only now I understood the hidden meaning of what I was looking for.”

In the final shots, old Rose comes on deck and throws the Heart of the Ocean diamond overboard. Then she returns to the cabin, lies down in bed and closes her eyes.
